"Where is baby?" she asked when she vas brought into the home. The mother tried to smile. "He has gone away for a long time," she said. "You must get along without him until he comes back from Heaven." That night the little girl cried for her brother, but the nurse—she was a new one, who would not be careless about gomery, Mobile and New draughts-told her that he had gone for a long visit. The next day the little girl was allowed to go to the window of the nursery and put her nose against the glass while she watched the cars go by. She stood there for a long time; then she cried out, suddenly: "There's brother! Look, nurse—it's baby!"

The new nurse looked across the street, where a pretty, young mother stood at a window with a baby in her arms. The mother waved her hand at
